INTRODUCTION

Many institutions, both national and international, are committed to strengthening and promoting African publishing by offering basic and post-entry career training for publishers, providing networks, and promoting a culture of reading and literature. In many instances there is little or no contact between publishers and the individual publishing houses appear to work mostly in isolation. As a result, the Goethe-Institut Johannesburg and the Frankfurt Book Fair decided to conduct a survey on the publishing industry in eight of the sub-Saharan countries, namely Cameroon, Ghana, Kenya, Mozambique, Nigeria, Senegal, Tanzania and Uganda.

Current programmes and activities were examined in order to understand the needs of the publishing sector. The Frankfurt Book Fair and the Goethe-Institut Johannesburg looked at ways on how they could assist in this sector, and whether cooperation with other institutions would be feasible and practicable, and whether this could lead to more sustainable and effective projects. A number of questionnaires were developed and sent to publishing houses, libraries, national and international institutions. Unfortunately not many of the questionnaires were completed and returned, and so important role-players in the industry were contacted by telephone and telephonic interviews were conducted with them. In addition, a thorough literature study and an exhaustive internet search were conducted on the publishing sector in this region. Information was collected with regard to existing aid programmes in this sector, vocational and further education, book fairs and festivals, literacy campaigns, book donation programmes, financing and financial support, distribution systems and existing networks.

The organisations and institutions listed in this publication are involved in publishing in one way or another and include publishing houses, libraries, book fairs and other activities as well as literacy campaigns and other training programmes. Each listing provides a brief profile, address and contact person of the organisation or institution. At the end of each country’s listing the researcher has provided a brief summary of the state of the country’s publishing sector and her own impressions. Finally, in the last chapter the most important results are summarised and suggestions are made with regard to what can be done to support and promote the publishing sector in sub-Saharan Africa.

It is important to note that only those institutions, libraries, publishers and programmes are listed whose postal address could be found on the internet. As this survey is based on a relative small sample, the results are not necessarily representative of the entire publishing sector in sub-Saharan Africa.
CAMEROON – OVERVIEW

GENERAL

French Cameroon gained independence in 1960 and is now known as the Republic of Cameroon. In 1961 the southern portion of neighbouring British Cameroon voted to merge with the new country to form the Federal Republic of Cameroon. In 1972 a new constitution replaced the federation with a unitary state, the United Republic of Cameroon. Cameroon became a member of the Commonwealth in 1995.

Cameroon is home to around 200 different ethnic groups and an even greater number of languages. Both Niger-Congo and Afro-Asiatic languages can be found here. Cameroon is one of the few countries where both English and French are official languages. Besides these, the Cameroonian dialects of West African Pidgin and, in urban areas, Camfranglais are widely used. In 2008, the literacy rate was 75.9%, and in July 2011 the population stood at 19.7 million.

The mission of the Langaa Research and Publishing Common Initiative Group (Langaa RPCIG) is to contribute to the cultural development of Africa. This is achieved by conducting research, providing training in research, writing and publishing, and promoting African scholarship and creative writing. Langaa is a non-profit organisation and is supported by the founding members and other contributors, financial grants and volunteers. Langaa has published over 100 titles, mainly on Cameroon, but also on other African countries like Malawi, Mali, Senegal, Burkina Faso, Kenya, Zimbabwe and South Africa. The group published 63 titles in 2010 and 158 in total since 2007.

NMI Education has been publishing in Cameroon for six years, mainly for the school market, in both English and French. The publisher has 50 employees and publishes about 50 new titles per year. Cambridge University Press itself has been active in Cameroon for ten years.

DISTRIBUTION
In Cameroon, some of the publishing houses sell their books directly to the booksellers, and some make use of distributors. Book sales via distributors are generally viewed as the safer option for publishers since the distributor is the one who carries the financial risk. Cambridge University Press, for example, works closely with the local NM&I Corporate Services who is the main importer and distributor of their books from the UK and US. Other publishers have established regional bureaus to facilitate supplies to smaller bookshops. Door-to-door selling is quite common too.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

There are no official campaigns. Nevertheless, the Summer Institute of Linguistics (SIL) which is supported by numerous governmental and religious institutions has been active in Cameroon for the last 40 years in the fields of language learning, linguistics and literacy.

The Cameroon’s Family Book Festival was held annually until 2008, unfortunately, no further information could be found.

A “Mobile Library or Books on Wheels Project” has been started and is supported by the National Book Development Council of Cameroon (NBDC) - http://www.gngwane.com/2008/04/post.html#more (accessed on 22.9.2011).

The main purpose of this project is to promote reading among the youth with particular emphasis on girls and to equip libraries in order to ensure that the youth has access to education and literacy. Through this project two main activities are carried out: (a) A bi-annual mobile vehicle reading campaign (books on wheels) for girls and rural youths in the South West Province; (b) distribution of books to key libraries, women empowerment centres and youth development centres of the South West Province of Cameroon.
COMMENTS

As in most of the African countries, mainly school- and textbooks are published. This causes a disproportional rise of bookshops/booksellers when the new school year starts, but which then close down for the rest of the year again soon afterwards. The prices of the schoolbooks are fixed by the Ministry of Trade, and the prices of other books are set by the publishers themselves and which in many cases are ignored by the bookshops which seem to set their own prices. Because of the way the distribution system works in Cameroon, the publishers are generally dependant on the booksellers. Many publishers would like to use the internet for online sales but the local banking system does not allow for this at the moment. The lack of a unified publishers’ association is often mentioned by people in the industry. A publishers’ association was founded in 1997, but since 2002 various splinter groups have developed from the original association, which has led to a great deal of confusion.

Publishers have expressed the desire for a higher level of professionalism, including more knowledge about the publishing industry as well as better technical equipment. They would also like to see more independence from the French publishing houses which, in their view, would lead to more capacity-building in the African publishing industry.
GHANA – OVERVIEW

GENERAL
Formed as a result of a merger between the British colony of the Gold Coast and the Togoland trust territory, Ghana became the first sub-Saharan country in colonial Africa to gain independence in 1957. English is the official language, and the political, economic, legal and educational systems are based on the British model. The Asante, Ewe, Fante, Kwa and Gur peoples represent the biggest ethnic as well as linguistic groups in Ghana. With a population of 24.7 million (July 2011), Ghana has a literacy rate of 57.9 % (2010).

The Ghana Library Board was established as the result of a donation by the late Rt. Rev. John Orfeur Aglionby, the then Anglican Bishop of Accra. In 1946, the Aglionby Library Management Committee worked with the British Council Advisory Committee towards library development in the then Gold Coast. The aims and objectives of the GLB are to promote education through the provision of reading materials such as books, periodicals and other non-book materials; and to act as a centre for information dissemination for the general public. It also runs national public libraries in all the regions. There are ten regional libraries (one in each of the ten regions of Ghana) and 53 district and branch libraries which make up the core business. In all regions there are also mobile libraries which visit the smaller municipalities. The Ghana Library Board manages the Accra Central Library, with combined holdings of over five million volumes in 2008.

The Ghana Book Trust (GBT) is a non-governmental, non-profit voluntary organisation which is operated as a charity organisation for educational purposes. It was established in Ghana in 1990 by the Canadian non-governmental organisation, CODE. GBT programmes support children’s literacy mainly in select districts in the Ashanti Region. For The Reading Ghana Programme, GBT works with the Ghana Education Service (GES) and other stakeholders to promote and encourage the development of a reading culture among children, to improve programme quality, and to expand GBT activities to reach more schools in the country. The GBT also provides donated books to other beneficiaries to support education. Moreover, the GBT also offers training in library management.

Founded in 1973, Afram claims to be Ghana’s first indigenous publishing house. Its aim is to provide an extensive range of innovative, high quality and competitive educational products, with particular emphasis on Ghanaian literature and textbooks for Ghanaian schools. It also specialises in educational materials for pre-school education and basic education in Ghana. The corporate goals are to "develop local authorship, create exportable books for sale, and help minimise government’s expenditure on imported books”.

Sedco’s range of books covers pre-school, primary, secondary and tertiary textbooks. Sedco also has a list of readers and fiction for all levels. Sedco is the first Ghanaian publisher to win the coveted NOMA award for publishing in Africa. Sedco is the Ghana representative of its United Kingdom partner Pearson. Together they have published textbooks by subject associations, thus providing the Associations with a reliable revenue source to enhance their nation-building activities. Sedco has an expanding network of shops with service centres across Ghana. Sedco is mainly responsible for printing books published by the parent company, although it is now also printing external jobs for other publishing houses and individuals.

Set up in 1984, Woeli Publishing Services started by publishing two collections of poetry. Thereafter other poetry collections followed and the publishing house became known for supporting creative writers of poetry, prose and drama. Currently Woeli also publishes scholarly and children’s books. In addition, Woeli Publishing Services has recently also started publishing for schools and colleges. They also release books in the local language Ewe. Moreover, throughout its existence the publishing house has also offered services like editing, typesetting, design and typography to its numerous customers, including fellow publishers.
DISTRIBUTION
Imported books are cheaper than locally produced books. Direct sales take place by agents during events and book fairs. Print-on-demand is very popular in Ghana. Digibooks and WPS for example use print-on-demand for smaller publication projects.

BOOK FAIRS

Ghana International Book Fair – annually since 2002
Upcoming dates: 4-9 August 2012

The Ghana International Book Fair has some international exhibitors, mainly from India (especially printers and publishers), the UK, US and UAE. The fair sees itself as a trade fair: “The Ghana International Book Fair offers African publishers the gateway to West Africa in terms of trade opportunities. There are a variety of exhibitors and visitors offering meaningful exchange in selling rights, co-publishing, joint ventures and direct buying.” (http://www.ghanabookfair.com/about.php)

OTHER ACTIVITIES

The Ghanaian Book Development Council, a unit under the Ministry of Education, promotes reading and literacy.

The Ghana Book Trust offers further education and training for teachers regarding literacy and reading promotion and organises reading competitions. Training in library management is also available - the head teachers of schools which have rooms to allocate to libraries are trained in library management to enable them to organise their libraries. Fifty schools are targeted yearly. The trained teachers are expected to train one teacher and library prefects to assist them in the running of the libraries. The Ghana Book Trust also has been arranging book donations from the USA to students and libraries since 1990.

COMMENTS

In 1991, the Canadian Organisation for Development through Education (CODE) helped to reorganise the Ghana Book Publishers' Association. Capacity-building took place by means of seminars, book fairs, workshops and the provision of office equipment. Since then, the number of members has constantly grown and currently the association has about 70 members. Textbooks make up the largest sector of publishing in Ghana. There is also a large traditional market for Christian literature. With the available training opportunities in publishing at the university and the different initiatives organised by the Ghana Book Trust, the Ghanaian book sector seems to be thriving. Moreover, the annual international book fair in Accra acts as a supportive element in the publishing sector. There are bookshop chains like EPP, Challenge and Readwide Bookshop in addition to independent bookshops.

Unfortunately, local publishers have to compete with the lower prices for imported books. Print-on-demand is very popular in Ghana; Digibooks and WPS in particular utilise print-on-demand for smaller publication projects. Piracy is a serious issue in Ghana; copyright is often infringed, but is not dealt with very effectively. A copyright law is to be introduced soon and the Ghana Copyright Office has already been established. Partnerships with foreign publishing houses, which would license, co-publish or co-finance a project with a local publisher, are being promoted. Running an agency for foreign publishers in Ghana is also an attractive option for local publishers.
KENYA – OVERVIEW

GENERAL
In 1963, the former British colony gained independence under Jomo Kenyatta. English and Swahili are the official languages. There are more than 40 different ethnic groups, of which over 60% belong to the Bantu and speak Kikuyu, Luhya, Swahili, Kamba and Kisii. Besides these, there are 30 other languages spoken in Kenya. The literacy rate lies at 85.1 % (2010) with an overall population of 41.08 million (July 2011).

Kenya National Library Service Board is a state corporation under the Ministry of State for National Heritage and Culture. The Board was established by an Act of Parliament in 1965 to provide library and information services to the Kenyan public. The Board is mandated by the Act to promote, establish, equip, manage, maintain and develop libraries in Kenya. To date, a network of 58 branch libraries has been established countrywide.

The KNLS also runs the National Library which is the depository centre for all publications that are published in or with an interest in Kenya (www.knls.ac.ke/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=68&Itemid=185).

Furthermore, the KNLS runs a Public Library with various departments open to the public, i.e. children’s library, library for the blind, newspaper reading room.

One of the KNLS activities is the Camel mobile library which operates in the North-Eastern part of Kenya. The majority of the users are school children, adult learners, social workers involved in various community initiatives and pensioners (www.knls.ac.ke/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=70&Itemid=141).

UONP is the oldest university press in Kenya and became fully operational in 1990. Besides publishing, UONP offers editorial services, typesetting, designing and printing of publications.

DISTRIBUTION

Direct sales take place through local agents in schools and at markets. The establishment of regional distribution centres failed. More and more regional bookstores represent certain publishing houses and therefore receive a discount of up to 40% on the respective books.

Direct and business-to-business (B2B) sales via websites are becoming increasingly popular. Payment via mobile phones (M-Pesa, Zap) makes online distribution easy.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

In 2009, Kenya has been celebrating the first version of the Hay Festival in Africa which has been established as an annual event. It takes place in Nairobi and is organised by Storymoja, a local collective of authors. Storymoja also organises reading and writing competitions, book and theatre festivals.

Important literary awards in Kenya are the Wahome Mutahi Award and Jomo Kenyatta Prize for Literature Award (JKPLA).

The National Kenya Book Development Council organises an annual national book week which takes place in addition to the Nairobi International Book Fair and is supported by the regional libraries.

COMMENTS

The Publishers’ Association set up in 1972 has about 40 members. There are approximately 50 publishers throughout the country. The number of book stores is more than 1000, including those which are only open for part of the year. There is also quite a number of bookshop chains. In addition to the bookshops, books are also sold by book sellers at stations and markets.

Textbooks generate the biggest turnover (approx. US$300 million per year). Children’s books and books on job training are becoming increasingly popular. In addition there are Christian, academic and literary publishers.

Kenyan publishers do not only publish for their own market, but also for Rwanda, Uganda and South Sudan. The Kenyan printing industry also produces for East Africa. All in all, Kenya’s publishing sector appears to be robust and thriving.

E-publishing and online distribution looks very promising. International bestsellers – print and electronic – imported from the US and Europe are sold by local publishers. Mainly new and upcoming publishing houses are working on digital school teaching material. But due to a lack of electricity and suitable hardware only a few schools can make use of this material.

There are fixed prices for textbooks only.
Kenya’s copyright law was established in 2001, and allows for high monetary fines or imprisonment up to 10 years. Infringement of copyright law is estimated to amount to US$30 million per year.
MOZAMBIQUE – OVERVIEW

GENERAL
Almost five centuries as a Portuguese colony came to an end when Mozambique gained independence in 1975. It has a population of 22.9 million (July 2011). The ethnic majority is Bantu who speak Swahili. The next two biggest tribes are the Makua and Tsonga. However, Portuguese is the only official language. The literacy rate stands at 47.8% (2003).

DISTRIBUTION

There are approximately ten bookshops countrywide, of which six are in the capital Maputo. Many Books are sold directly by publishing. The National Book and Record Institute (INLD), which was implemented by the government after independence, appears to be unable to deal with production and distribution of all printed products since its inception in the mid-1980s. The institute has gradually assumed the role of a central register of publications.

Internet book sales are becoming more important, but are still at an early stage in their development.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

In February 2011 the Mozambican government announced that it was committed to reducing the illiteracy rate from the current estimate of 48.1% to 30% by 2015, by stepping up its literacy and adult education programmes. The Cabinet approved the Second Literacy and Adult Education Strategy, which envisages making a million adults literate per year. Deputy Education Minister Augusto Jone did not reveal how much the implementation of the strategy will cost (http://allafrica.com; accessed on 29.9.11).

There are also NGOs that fund reading campaigns and mobile libraries and they provide financial support for book production with the aim of reducing prices. Authors are encouraged to visit schools.

COMMENTS

There are about 12 publishing companies in Mozambique, but detailed information could not be found on the internet. Textbooks are the biggest earners for Mozambique publishers. Besides that, mainly children’s literature, serious fiction and poetry are published.

Since the Association of Mozambican Authors (AEMO) was established in 1982, it has been publishing poetry and prose and aims to develop the writing and communication skills of local writers. The association has three own series: Início for new authors, Karingana for prose, and Timbila for poetry. AEMO also has an initiative which looks at producing publications in the national languages, e.g. in Shangaan which is also the main language spoken in the south of the country. These books have also been published in South Africa.
More and more Mozambican authors are publishing their books in Portugal. Brazil and Portugal are the two countries where rights and licences are traded and from where books are imported or exported to.

A substantial part of Mozambican literature has been published with financial support from Scandinavian aid agencies. According to some experts, increasing numbers of local publishing houses are turning into NGOs since as an NGO it is easier to obtain funds and financial support, and they are thus more profitable to run.
NIGERIA – OVERVIEW

GENERAL

Nigeria gained independence from Britain in 1960. In addition to English, which is the only official language, more than 500 other local languages are spoken in this country. Hausa, Igbo and Yoruba represent the three biggest indigenous ethnic groups and their languages. Nigeria has a literacy rate of 68% (2010) with a population of 155.2 million (July 2011).

The press also provides personalised self-publishing services including copy editing, proofreading, scanning, typing and marketing for writers to get their work published quickly.
DISTRIBUTION

Thirty per cent of the direct book sales in Nigeria take place through agents in any kind of shops, at events, fairs and markets. Thirty-five per cent of the production is sold to schools and universities. The rest is sold by retail bookshops. More and more publishers are selling their books via the internet - either via their own website (i.e. Walahi.com; Naijareads.com; Debonairbookstore.com; Kalahari.com.ng) or directly and exclusively via Amazon (The New Gong).

There are about 1500 retail booksellers in the country. Many of them are members in the Nigeria Booksellers’ Association or the Christian Booksellers’ Association Nigeria.

Besides the Nigeria International Book Fair, annual book fairs take place in Abuja, Enugu and Ife.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

In 2010, President G. Jonathan established a literacy campaign, “Bring back the book”, which aims to establish a book reading culture in Nigeria especially among the youth (www.bringbackthebook.org). Visits to schools and writing competitions are part of the programme. However, independent publishers are afraid that bureaucracy will suffocate the project.

COMMENTS

The Nigerian Publishers’ Association has 152 members; in addition there are about 250 non-registered small-scale publishers. The publishing sector in Nigeria appears to be quite vibrant and active. Nevertheless, there are several challenges. Even though there are copyright laws and an official Nigerian Copyright Commission, the reproduction of illegal copies of books is widespread. The Nigerian Publishers’ Association (NPA) has thus established an Anti-Piracy Committee to deal with the problem. Furthermore, the country lacks a well-established infrastructure and the printing industry is inadequate, and as a result most of the local publishers print outside Nigeria, in India for instance. To keep the costs down, many small publishing houses only sell via the internet, e.g. through Amazon.com. The author pays for all the production costs and therefore takes most of the profit, which leaves only a small margin of profit for the publisher. British literature still dominates the market, and many publishers are keen to publish more local literature.

Over the last ten years, the internet has gained a great deal of influence in Nigeria. By June 2010 there were almost 44 million internet users. According to the Webtrendsng.com report (www.webtrendsng.com) for August 2010, half of the top ten websites were newspapers. In the top 50 of the same list, educational websites were making the strongest debuts, with increasingly more students going online. Readers and students are the biggest target markets for the book publishing industry in Nigeria.

A recent development has been the introduction of internet payments for local purchases, and readers now have the opportunity to carry out business transactions (buying and selling) online. Websites that offer such services include NetNaira, Surepay, Cash Envoy, and the Virtual Terminal Network, which runs mobile, web, and card services. In February 2009, of the 123 respondents to the “Webtrendsng Internet usage in Nigeria” survey (www.webtrendsng.com), 19% purchased items online. By March 2010 half of the 1,142 respondents to the Digital Lifestyle of Connected Nigerians Survey had completed online transactions. There are several sites that offer these sales opportunities, the biggest being Tafoo.com.

A few of these sites such as Walahi.com, Naijareads.com, Debonairbookstore.com (books and e-readers) and Kalahari.com.ng also offer books (up to 90% are foreign) for sale. Internet users thus present a growing and promising market which the Nigerian book market and publishers in particular should make more use of.
SENEGAL – OVERVIEW

GENERAL
The French colonies of Senegal and the French Sudan merged in 1959 and in 1960 gained independence as the Mali Federation. The union broke up after only a few months. Senegal joined with Gambia to form the nominal confederation of Senegambia in 1982. The envisaged integration of the two countries was never carried out, and the union was dissolved in 1989. The official date of independence is 1960. In addition to French, which is the official language, the most widely spoken languages in Senegal are Wolof, Peul, Jola, Mandinka as well as the Mande languages. Senegal has a population of 12.6 million (July 2011) and a literacy rate of 39.3% (2002).

CODESRIA was established in 1973 as an independent pan-African research organisation focusing primarily on the social sciences. It is recognised not only as one of the first African social research organisations but also as the top non-governmental centre of social knowledge production on the continent. The core activities within the CODESRIA research programme are carried out in one of the following sub-programmes: The Gender Research Programme, The Child and Youth Studies Programme, The Economic Research Programme, The Academic Freedom Programme, and The African Humanities Programme. CODESRIA has also published guidelines for authors (African Scholarly Publishing Essays, edited by Alois Mambo. Oxford: African Books Collective, 2006, 221-263). This comprehensive guide for authors covers aspects of presentation and organisation of manuscripts, notes and reference systems, tables and illustrations, obtaining permissions to reproduce material, preparing text on disk, dealing with copy-editing queries and proofs, and preparing an index. While principally designed for CODESRIA authors, it is a useful tool for any author to have when preparing a manuscript for publication.

The Union for African Population Studies (UAPS) is a scientific, pan-African, non-profit organisation created as an initiative of the UN Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA) in 1984. UAPS operates in Benin, Cameroon, Côte d’Ivoire, Kenya, Lesotho, Morocco, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo and South Africa. The objectives of UAPS include promoting the scientific study of population in Africa through research, training, information, technical assistance and cooperation, to encourage collaboration among specialists of population issues in all African countries, and to facilitate research studies on key population issues in Africa. Furthermore, it aims at a broad dissemination of scientific information concerning population problems in Africa as well as ensuring that they are included in the development strategies of African countries. The activities of UAPS include the following four components: providing information on editing, publication and dissemination of scientific journals, newsletters and various other scientific publications; the setting up of a documentation centre; and the organisation of conferences and seminars. They also offer training which includes organisation of seminars/workshops regarding new research approaches and methods (data collection and analyses), the drafting and formulation of research proposals and study reports, and the use of research findings.

DISTRIBUTION

Agence de Distribution de Presse (ADP) in Dakar is the only professional distributor in Senegal and distributes books and newspapers in Senegal and in its neighbouring countries. Most books are produced in France and are sent to Senegal via Hachette France. ADP also contributes towards developing the interchange between West African countries by bringing their books into Senegal. So far there is no major distribution via the internet. Bigger bookshops use the internet for marketing. Publishing houses give their books to bookshops on a commission base including a discount of 20-30% on the price. The selling price is determined by the publisher, and often the book sellers ask for a reduction in price to gain better selling records. The publisher has to follow up the sale figures in order to receive his money from the book sellers. Sixty per cent of the whole print run of a book is usually sold at the launch of a book. Book launches are organised by the publishing house together with a bookshop. Recently bookshops have started publishing their own books. They expect the author to deliver the book ready to print (they do not offer editing, proof-reading or book designing services, etc.). Because the bookshops then only promote their own (often low quality) books, they represent a serious threat to the local publishers. The lack of a common distribution system appears to be the “Achilles’ heel” of the Senegalese publishing sector.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

The government is in the process of implementing school libraries, and also supports national publishers by not taxing imported books. The national NGO Bibliothèque Lecture Development (BLD) was set up in 1995 to produce children’s books especially for Senegalese children. The BLD is involved in setting up school and community libraries, training book sellers and organising an annual children’s book fair.

COMMENTS

There are about 45 active publishing houses in Senegal. Textbooks and school books account for 50% of the book production. Fiction and children’s books for young people have increased over the last few years due to governmental literacy campaigns as well as improved marketing. Many non-fiction books and do-it-yourself-books are published and handed out for free by local NGOs. Rural areas are undersupplied with teaching material. The highest turnover of teaching material occurs in private schools. Only the bigger cities have bookshops. The rest of the country is underdeveloped in this regard. To cover the growing interest in books, mobile libraries have been introduced. Book sellers trawl the markets and sell used and new titles as well as textbooks. These book sellers have established their own association. Generally reading in Senegal is not for pleasure but rather for information or educational purposes since books are expensive and libraries are not well stocked. The government has tried to address this situation by setting up school libraries and supporting national publishers by not taxing imported books. The literacy rate is at 40%, which means that the number of copies a publisher can sell is limited and can thus not generate large profits. The French market still dominates the book sector and local publishers would like to gain more independence from Hachette France.
TANZANIA – OVERVIEW

Shortly after achieving independence from Britain in the early 1960s, Tanganyika and Zanzibar merged to form Tanzania in 1964. The official languages are English and Swahili. The country has 120 ethnic groups, each with their own language. The Bantu with the languages Swahili, Chagga, Sukuma and others, are the biggest group representing 60% of the population. Tanzania has a population of 42.7 million (July 2011). The literacy rate is 69.4% (2002).

Mkuki na Nyota Publishers Ltd (MNP) was founded in 1991 by Walter Bgoya. It is a book publishing company that researches, creates, publishes, markets and sells general books, children’s books, trade books and educational books in Tanzania and throughout East Africa. African Books Collective (ABC) and Michigan State University Press (MSUP) are their distributors overseas. In addition, MNP books are available through Amazon.com, Barnes & Noble, Lightning Source (UK and US) and through Gardners, UK.

DISTRIBUTION

The distribution of books takes place through distributors, booksellers and bookshops. There appears to be a cordial relationship between them and the publishers. Unfortunately, it was not possible to find more details about the Tanzanian distribution system.

The Publishers Association of Tanzania is organising the annual Tanzania Book Week Festival.

Terre des Hommes and Baobab Books founded a literacy project in 2010: The world in books (http://www.baobabbooks.ch/en/projects/kilaka_tansania/). The alliance between Baobab Books and Terre des Hommes Switzerland with the Tanzanian book author John Kilaka aims at preserving the local story-telling tradition and use the simplest means to manually produce small books, and then circulate them through libraries.

In 2011, a new campaign was launched by the Ministries of Education of Tanzania and Cuba. There are plans for a Cuban expert to work together with local Tanzanian education experts in order to eradicate illiteracy.

COMMENTS

A precise number for publishers could not be found. Textbooks are the biggest earners for Tanzanian publishers, which is why the Publishers’ Association of Tanzania (PATA) objected when The Ministry of Education tried to establish one single textbook for schools in 2011.

Publishing local authors is far too expensive for most of the small local publishing houses; however, they would like to promote their local literature more.

Roughly a third of the population uses mobile phones and other digital innovations are slowly beginning to be used by an increasing number of people.

The work of the Publishers’ Association (PATA) is perceived as helpful and beneficial by the publishers.
UGANDA – OVERVIEW

GENERAL
After the first parliamentary elections in 1958, Uganda gained independence from Britain in 1962. English and Swahili are the official languages. An additional 50 local languages such as Luganda, Acholi and Lugbara are also spoken. Uganda has an overall population of 34.6 million (July 2011). The literacy rate is 66.8% (2002).

DISTRIBUTION

Uganda used to have distribution centres for school books. But as the government wanted to strengthen the communication between schools and publishing houses, it allowed direct sales to schools. However, the distribution centres have complained and the distribution policy is set to change again.

There is no organised distribution system for non-school books. Publishers sell their books directly to the bookshops - either on commission or by deposit sale. This means the bookshops pay the full discounted price for the books and thus there is no longer a need to follow up on sold copies. The bookshops set the price of books they sell, which is usually higher than the recommended price by the publisher. Most publishers also sell their books directly in their own shops or offices. Kampala has well-stocked bookshops. Book sales on markets are no longer common.

NABUTO organises several literacy events like Children’s and Community Reading Tents throughout the year in different regions. The annual National Book Week festival organised by NABUTO also includes the Schools Book Week programme which is a series of activities such as read-aloud marathons, story-telling, book discussions and debates on a book-related theme. Over 15,000 primary schools across Uganda participate in the Schools Book Week programme which is organised in collaboration with the Ministry of Education and Sports.

Together with the East African School of Library and Information Science, NABUTO arranged a School Library Development Programme in the Palissa District in 2007 which led to remarkable improvements in library skills (http://ifl.sagepub.com/content/35/2/141.abstract) (accessed 18.9.2011).

COMMENTS

Considering the various training opportunities and activities, the book market in Uganda appears to be fairly stable. There are 40 publishing houses in Uganda. Yet many of these are struggling. According to the publishers, except for the textbook market, the general book market is weak. The existing Publishers’ Association (UPA) doesn’t seem to be very active in general, and doesn’t appear to be of any help to the smaller publishing houses. Many publishers who are members of ABC (African Book Collective – please see “International Organisations”) sell more books via their websites than via local bookshops. Authors only get paid their royalties once they have accumulated a certain amount, e.g. US$ 50, which usually doesn’t happen quicker than in one year. This figure is a good indicator of the state of the local book market. The role of the government is not clear; it seems to change its book policies fairly often and the policies are not always transparent.
CONCLUSION

In 1990 Hans Zell described Africa “as largely a bookless society” (H. Zell: Africa – the neglected continent, In: LOGOS, 2, 1990; 19-27). In the 1990s the African publishing sector recovered and the book market improved. However, the situation has changed again; many of the programmes and initiatives started in the 1990s have stopped or have become dormant. It is now exceptionally difficult to find publications released after 2003, which might be an indicator of reduced interest. Zell describes the current situation as: “World aid agencies have backed away. Donor policies and priorities have shifted. The climate for funding of book programmes is becoming increasingly difficult” (ibid.). In her report Book and Publishing Assistance Programs: A Review and Inventory (2000), Carol Priestley identifies 59 organisations - government, private, charity and commercial - which are active in Africa. At the time of writing, the review of the institutions yielded that many had either disappeared completely or had ceased their activities in the book sector. Many of the organisations have been restructured, and a number of departments mentioned by Priestley in 2000 no longer exist.

In many cases publishers have completely switched to the educational sector, focusing in particular on sex education with regard to HIV/AIDS. In other cases they have simply run out of money, e.g. the Bellagio Publishing Network. The network used to offer an excellent website with much valuable information (event calendar, list of organisations, links, etc.) up to 2007. However, due to insufficient resources the website is no longer active. Donor policies have changed and there is little support from governments in most of the African countries. According to Zell, “a sustainable system of book provision and book development, and a flourishing book industry, are possible only with government support that recognises the strategic importance of publishing, and demonstrates this in official commitment in policies and budgets.” (H. Zell: Publishing in Africa: where are we now? In: LOGOS, 19, 2008; 309-321). Only a small number of countries have implemented copyright laws. And even where they do exist, it is extremely difficult for publishers to enforce copyright and prosecute offenders. Nor do any of the countries mentioned here have laws regarding the fixing of prices for books. This complicates the sale of books, as in most cases publishers sell their books to bookshops, which in turn determine the final price.

The eight countries described above differ substantially from each other. For example, there are great variations in the number of existing publishing houses as well as in the number of bookshops. Each country has different means of distributing books. However, most lack an established distribution system. Publishers sell their books directly to individual bookshops or they send door-to-door salesmen to the more remote areas. Marketing and selling via the internet is becoming increasingly popular although this is also fraught with difficulties. For instance, in many countries credit cards cannot be used to make online purchases. Moreover, not everybody has a credit card or even has access to a computer and the internet. Nevertheless, for many publishing houses the only way to keep their costs down is by selling their books only online. Publishers believe that the establishment of an efficient distribution system would take some of the pressure off the publisher. The current lack of reliable distribution systems also presents an obstacle for cross-border sales. Books are not produced for neighbouring markets as they simply cannot get there. One solution to this problem would be to set up co-productions between publishing houses in different countries and implement digital publishing across country borders, and in this way a much larger audience could be reached.

Digital innovations for mobile phones or e-books are not very popular so far. Some of the problems in this regard are poor network coverage and weak Internet connections, as well as high costs and other technical difficulties. However, several publishers do believe that there are opportunities in this regard and that they could be used as an efficient method of delivering books to distant markets, in addition to leading to lower production and distribution costs. Even though the figures for mobile phone and Internet users have steadily increased over the last few years, technical issues should still be kept in mind: only the latest smart phones have a big enough screen for reading an e-book; in rural areas network coverage is poor, downloading takes a long time and thus becomes costly; in addition, in rural areas there is often no electricity for charging phones or e-book readers. An interesting venture in this regard is the newly-founded business of Arthur Attwell in South Africa - Paperight (www.paperight.com ). This new business venture offers to turn copy shops or Internet Cafés into print-on-demand bookstores. Paperight supplies books online which can be printed once the shop has been registered as a Paperight outlet. The idea is to cut out expensive book distribution, to instantly put bookstores and libraries in every town, and help grow entrepreneurial printing businesses. This of course is only possible with a good paper supply. Paperight is already in negotiations with South African educational publishers.

Interestingly, none of the publishing houses which returned the research questionnaire received any funding money. It appears that most publishers finance their operations through credit facilities. In many cases authors contribute by paying the printing costs. It thus comes as no surprise that financial support was mentioned as an issue that needs to be addressed. Moreover, publishers are constantly aiming at improving their business through increasing production, improving their sales, providing professional training, purchasing better technical equipment to improve the quality or even in order to be able to lower book prices.

Libraries find themselves in a similar situation as the bookshops. Especially in rural areas, public libraries are rare and mostly under-equipped. Even though many libraries offer mobile services, this is always restricted to a certain radius and a restricted collection of books. In many cases, they do no longer offer free Internet access. In many countries, book donation programmes exist, aiming at providing books to libraries and establishing new libraries, especially in remote and under-equipped areas. Most of the international institutions that offer such programmes work with local partners who are responsible for the distribution. One of the problems encountered in such international book donation programmes is that the books donated are not always suitable for the audience in the respective country because they had been produced for a different European or US market. In other cases, the books are produced by a publishing house in the respective African country, sold via an international retailer like ABC (African Books Collective, UK) in Europe and then sent back to the country of origin in order to be donated there. But in most cases, the book donations for libraries and schools have been books written by non-African authors and published by non-African publishers, thus hindering the installation and development of local publishing structures (for more information on the publishers, thus hindering impact of book donation programmes see: http://www.ehlingmedia.com/blog/?p=940) (accessed 12.2.2012).

Apart from a lack of books, poverty and illiteracy present serious obstacles, primarily in non-urban areas. Literacy campaigns are often launched by the government but mostly without involving local publishing houses. Hence these campaigns do not appeal to the publishers very much, and often they do not last long enough to create sustainable changes concerning literacy and reading behaviour.

All things considered, marketing, distribution and training are important issues that urgently need to be addressed. While governments and donors have invested in the educational sector over the last years, there has been little financial, political and moral support for the book sector and libraries. The promotion of book and library development by increasing regional cooperation within and between African nations, increasing licencing agreements between African and European/American publishers and promoting a reading culture with the help and involvement of the producing publishers can contribute towards making the publishing sector a more viable venture in sub-Saharan Africa.

Created in 1988, it was initially set up as a framework for better coordination among development agencies which are active in African countries. It now comprises the Ministries of Education in Africa, development agencies and NGOs, and concerns itself with materials development, access and dissemination. It has also developed into a network of policy-makers, educators and researchers. There are currently nine ADEA working groups. They are led by funding agencies and/or ministries of education and other African organisations. The activities of some working groups are carried out by specialised agencies such as UNESCO or by African institutions. The working groups cover the following topics: Books and learning materials, communication for education and development, distance education and open learning, early childhood development, education management and policy support, higher education, mathematics and science education, non-formal education, and teaching. ADEA and its working group on books and learning materials (WGBLM) also organised a conference on book development in Africa which took place in Nairobi, Kenya, in October 2011.

Carnegie Corporation of New York, which was established by Andrew Carnegie in 1911 “to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding,” is one of the oldest, largest and most influential of American foundations providing grants. The foundation makes grants to promote international peace and to advance education and knowledge - primary concerns to which founder Andrew Carnegie devoted the foundation. The corporation has made major grants to sub-Saharan African libraries and this has led to additional funding, including from governments, to rebuild public libraries in South Africa and to revitalise the libraries of several universities on the continent. E-learning and connectivity to the internet have been part of their grant-making portfolio for several years.

The keystone of Sabre’s book program is that it is demand-driven. Sabre gives its overseas partners the opportunity to select books and CD-ROMs from detailed inventory offering lists. Only titles and quantities specifically requested by its partners are shipped by Sabre. Those titles are new, high-quality, up-to-date books selected by Sabre from the offerings made by donating publishers.

The Publishing Training Centre at Book House (PTC) provides cost-effective and high quality training for publishers in the UK and overseas. Previously known as Book House Training Centre, PTC is an educational charity organisation dedicated to the pursuit of excellence in publishing. PTC also runs a number of courses overseas, including Africa, on diverse topics such as editorial skills, marketing and the development of commercial publishing.

Southern African Book Development Education Trust (SABDET)
Website: www.europublishing.info/sabdetarchive/index.htm

SABDET was a UK-based charitable education trust that worked in support of indigenous publishing in Africa from 1994 to 2008. Unfortunately the organisation was wound up in 2008. The site still exists and has many references to published papers and seminars. SABDET’s objective was to promote education with particular reference to indigenous publishing in Africa as a means of communication and literacy. They encouraged co-operation between book publishers and distributors as well as between the industrialised world and Africa. They also worked with partners in Africa and internationally in pursuing their aims, including, in particular, the Zimbabwe International Book Fair (ZIBF), and the African Publishers Network (APNET).
