Meike Werner chairs the Department of Germanic and Slavic Languages at Vanderbilt University. After studies in Tübingen she went on to earn an interdisciplinary Ph.D. in German at Yale. After teaching at Brandeis University, she joined Vanderbilt University in 1997. Werner has published on German literature, print media, intellectual history, and the history of Germanistik from the eighteenth to the twentieth century. Her teaching spans from the literature of the Middle Ages to early twentieth century modernism and the late twentieth century (post-wall) literature. Her books include Eduard Berend und Heinrich Meyer Briefwechsel, 1938-1972 (2013), Moderne in der Provinz. Kulturelle Experimente im Fin de Siècle Jena (2003), and special issues for the Germanic Review and Internationale Archiv für die Sozialgeschichte der deutschen Literatur (IASL). In addition, she is the co-editor of German Literature, Jewish Critics: The Brandeis Symposium (2002).