

Cameroon | Yaoundé

“Mamy Watas”

In a little town of Cameroon called MBALMAYO, there is a river called river NYONG and on that river, there is a big rock and under that rock, about people tales, there is a town and in that town the paining souls of peoples who lost life in that river because of the queen of that river underwater... A broken heart MAMY WATAS left down by her designated soul mate.

The legend is telling that every year she writes a list of how many husbands she wants and then she ways along the town to attract young people. She catches fishermen, she kidnaps late walkers overcrossing their bridge at night and appears in bedrooms of those who dare take rings she leaves down expressly on her river's sides. She brings them all in her town under the big rock, for an intensive but short love story before killing them all.

The legend is also saying that to remove corpses of her dead victims families of the last ones must shed an important sum of money coins in the river. So, you, walkers be careful don't walk alone in the deeper dark of the city at late times. And however, do never take goods and rings you find at streams, rivers or seas sides. If not, you will live eternally in the deeper abyssal, dark waters of the river queen... MAMY WATAS!

Copyright: Goethe-Institut Cameroon, 2012