Chapter 2 by Pichet Klunchun

21 FEB 2026 / 19:00-20:00 / Bangkok Kunsthalle

20 years after his solo performance I AM A DEMON launched him into global attention. Pichet Klunchun premieres a new solo performance as part of da:ns focus – Connect Asia Now (CAN) in September 2025.

Bold yet contemplative Chapter 2 sees Pichet looking back on his artistic practice to understand the evolution of his methods and intellectual desires, through the challenges and limitations he has faced.

An esteemed contemporary dancer and choreographer based in Thailand and known internationally, Pichet has not only effectively transformed the traditional khon mask dance from within its own conventions, but also extended the potential of the classical court form through experimentation with technology.

In Chapter 2, he returns to scrutinize his own physical dancing body, this time with the wisdom of asking how his sustained injury now negotiates with itself and with the standard that khon dance demands. He opens an effective conversation with AI on issues of embodiment and expressivity, and also of co-authoring a performance.

Always the provocateur, Pichet shifts from challenging tradition to confronting AI. If I AM A DEMON contests the rules of Thai classical body, Chapter 2 tests the limits of being human—particularly regarding “feeling” versus mechanical reproduction. The question “Can AI dance with feeling?” becomes a mirror that reflects on Pichet himself: in what ways is he becoming mechanical, emotionally less human? From one who once dismantled khon, Pichet now becomes a philosopher of movement: asking how khon can survive in a new world order, and how the human body can coexist with its machinic other.

RIDING THE RHYTHM

A Work-in-Progress By Kornkarn Rungsawang

22 FEB 2026 / 12:00-13:00 / Bangkok Kunsthalle

RIDING THE RHYTHM emerges from a conversation between Kornkarn and her father about a solo performance titled “OOK-MA” (Horse Dance), an improvised folk li-kay performance in which rhythm plays a central role, one that was once performed by her grandfather in the past. This dialogue led to a reconsideration of what rhythm means, and brought her back to memories of growing up within a family of folk performance artists, where dance functioned as living knowledge, transmitted through the body, storytelling, and forms of being together across generations.

When reflecting on the layered crises of the present, climate change, war, and technologies that relentlessly accelerate the pace of life, often at the expense of bodily attunement and ecological awareness, we find ourselves increasingly disconnected from our bodies and from nature. Inherited structures of thought and imagination no longer correspond to the complexity of the contemporary world. This condition urges us to re-examine how we think, coexist, and perceive the world anew.

Within this context, RIDING THE RHYTHM returns to embodied practice as a way of listening again. The work explores rhythm not as a fixed structure or something owned by an individual, but as something that emerges through relationships, interdependence, and negotiation between the body and forces beyond human control.

Through Kornkarn’s experience of learning to ride a horse, she encounters rhythms that are not her own, rhythms shaped by nature and by the mutual negotiation of bodies, without a fixed center of authority. Movement does not begin with command, but with memory, perception, and shared response, shaped by trust, vulnerability, and attention to the other. Horse riding thus becomes not merely a symbol or metaphor, but a process of rediscovering bodily rhythm, one that transforms how we listen to and perceive the rhythms of life once again.

Choreographic Masterclass / Immersion in Creation

Works created through the Fast Track Master Class by Olivier Dubois with Thai artists

22 February 2026 / 18:00-19:00

Sodsai Pantoomkomol Centre for Dramatic Arts, Chulalongkorn University

The Fast Track Master Class by Olivier Dubois is a core component of the Thailand Choreography Symposium 2026 and the pedagogical framework of the National Choreography Centre of Thailand (NCCT). Designed as an intensive immersion, this masterclass reflects NCCT's commitment to professional-level choreographic training grounded in real creative conditions.

Conducted over five consecutive days (5 × 4 hours), this program offers more than a technical workshop. It is a condensed yet complete immersion into a choreographic creation process as it unfolds within a professional company.

The objective is to create an original work in real time, inviting Thai performers to engage in a demanding and interactive compositional process. Participants move through the sensitive stages of choreographic writing: exploring, testing, refining, and making continuous adjustments in response to the work's evolving rhythms.

This experience emphasizes attentiveness, availability, and commitment—welcoming uncertainty and surprise as essential forces that enrich the choreographic gesture. Participants are invited to experience what it means to compose with bodies that are fully present and engaged in a precise artistic direction.

In alignment with NCCT's vision, this masterclass is not a collective creation, but a deep immersion into the authorial process of Olivier Dubois himself. It offers Thai artists rare access to an internationally recognized choreographer's creative methodology, reinforcing NCCT's role as a platform for advanced choreographic transmission, artistic rigor, and international exchange.

23 FEB 2026 / 19:00-20:00

Bangkok Kunsthalle

ISAN BRAZIL emerges from an artistic encounter initiated by Jitti Chompee, Director of the National Choreography Centre of Thailand (NCCT), who was immediately captivated by Vitor Hamamoto's presence as a self-taught performer. What resonated was not only Hamamoto's physical mastery, but the way his body embodies a convergence of mixed heritage—nationality, skin color, and culture—coexisting with remarkable clarity and balance.

Driven by a curatorial curiosity, Chompee proposed an experiment: what happens when an artist is displaced into a new environment—geographically, culturally, and socially? How might a shift in place, sound, and collective memory reshape the artist's perspective and allow a new choreographic voice to emerge? ISAN BRAZIL is the result of this inquiry.

This work is a reimagining of Hamamoto's solo Missing Names, developed through collaboration with Morlam artists—traditional folk musicians from the College of Music, Mahasarakham University, whose music is historically associated with healing and communal memory. By bringing contemporary choreography into dialogue with ancestral sound, the piece bridges distant geographies and lived histories, revealing how movement can become a site of exchange, adaptation, and transformation.

About the Artist Vitor Hamamoto is a self-taught Brazilian choreographer and performer whose distinctive movement language has emerged from sustained personal research and rigorous artistic exploration. Using his body as the primary site of inquiry and expression, he challenges physical and emotional limits to articulate universal human narratives. His choreographic practice balances sensitivity and intensity, generating works that resonate strongly with both audiences and critics.

Sodsai Pantoomkomol Centre for Dramatic Arts, Chulalongkorn University

In Morlam Collective, artistic director Jitti Chompee continues his exploration of movement, trance, and the transformative power of folk performance by reimagining Morlam—the deeply rooted musical and performative tradition of Northeastern Thailand (Isaan)—through a contemporary choreographic lens. The work unfolds in two parts, each revealing a distinct facet of cross-cultural and cross-temporal dialogue.

Jitti expands his choreographic research by developing a new performance framework with the Khon Kaen Choreography Development (KKCD) collective. Here, Morlam becomes choreographic material—its rhythms, vocal intonations, and performative gestures are deconstructed and reassembled through contemporary dance. The result is a physical dialogue between tradition and transformation, where folk wisdom and modern bodies coexist within an ever-evolving process of reinvention.

Morlam Collective embodies Jitti's vision of a living archive—a performance that listens to the past while improvising toward the future. It positions Morlam not as a relic of cultural heritage, but as a dynamic, living force within the contemporary performance landscape.

Encountering Jitti Chompee's work through a Western perspective often generates a sense of defamiliarization. His choreographic creation draws inspiration from traditional mythology, not through direct narration, but by activating the imagination and opening space for interpretation. By positioning tradition alongside contemporary re-reading, the work challenges familiarity and, in doing so, becomes a catalyst for creativity.

Through a semiological approach, the choreography invites audiences to reconsider traditional literature and symbolic systems from a renewed perspective, allowing new meanings to emerge. Elements of human realism intersect with the surreal dimensions of mythological worlds, creating a layered and paradoxical landscape within the work.

By distilling the essence of the traditional art form and intentionally reducing ornamental elements, the work foregrounds meaning over spectacle. In this process, Western audiences gradually recognize that the artistic value lies not in aesthetic decoration alone, but in the contribution of meaning—promoting autonomy, critical reflection, and the cultivation of humanity through an embodied exploration of human emotion.

A performance of The Miscellany of Khon and the world premiere of the "Miscellany of Khon" six-part documentary series took place at Mille Plateaux CCN La Rochelle on November 4, 2023, on November 7, 2023, at the Opéra de Limoges / Centre Jean Moulin.

The Miscellany of Khon featured in the Bienal Internacional de Danza de Cali, held at the "La Licorera," the Center for Dance and Choreography of the Valle del Cauca, in Colombia, on November 10–12, 2023 Museum Guimet, Paris, France, on May 25, 2024 Diligentia & Pepijn Theater, The Hague, the Netherlands, on August 30, 2024 is a Tokyo-born choreographer and multidisciplinary artist, widely recognized as a leading figure in the Japanese avant-garde art scene. Founder of the company S20, he creates highly immersive works that integrate intense physicality with digital imagery, sound, light, and spatial composition, treating time and space as central choreographic elements. His performances and installations have been presented internationally at major festivals and institutions, and his long-term project Superkinesis explores fundamental human kinetic forces through dancers of diverse physical backgrounds. Working also as a composer, lighting designer, scenographer, and visual artist, Umeda's practice blurs the boundaries between dance and visual art, earning him global acclaim, including a Prix Ars Electronica Honorary Mention.

Artist Talk / Demonstration: New Approaches to Movement Research in Relation to Technology and Improvisation

14:00–15:00

This artist talk and demonstration introduces Hiroaki Umeda's ar.s.c approach to movement research, focusing on the relationship between the body, technology, and improvisation. Drawing from his choreographic practical, Umeda shares how sensory perception, impulse, and physical awareness inform his creative process, and how technological elements—such as light, sound, and digital systems.

Open Lab with Thai Artists

15:00–17:00

The Open Lab creates a shared experimental space for Thai artists to engage directly with Umeda's methodologies. Through practical exploration and open exchange, participants are invited to investigative movement, perception, and improvisation, fostering dialogue between contemporary choreographic research and local artistic practices.

2. Dance Method Workshop: Doutai Method

23 Feb 2026 | 15:00–18:00 Bangkok Kunsthalle

This practical workshop introduces Hiroaki Umeda's Doutai Method. Doutai Method is a method of movement developed not as a dance style, but as a fundamental principle underlying all forms of movement. Starting with the basics—such as standing and releasing unnecessary tension—it provides a logical and structured approach to using natural forces to move the body and create flow. The method is used in Hiroaki Umeda's own choreographic works, and because it focuses on how to engage with the body itself, it can be shared across dance genres and beyond.

Performance, Identity, and Cultural Inquiry

As part of the Thailand Choreography Symposium 2026, the National Choreography Centre of Thailand (NCCT) welcomes choreographer Hillel Kogan for an intensive masterclass that places choreography at the intersection of performance, cultural studies, and social reflection.

Hillel Kogan's artistic practice investigates performance strategies while critically questioning the function of art and its role within society. His work observes and deconstructs the conventions that shape the artistic field, opening space to engage with what is human, fragile, unsettling, playful, and absurd.

This masterclass focuses on creative development, composition, and improvisation, inviting performers to observe dance and the body through a cultural and contextual lens. Through embodied practice, participants explore social and cultural questions, with a particular emphasis on identity—how it is formed, performed, negotiated, and challenged within contemporary society.

Aligned with NCCT's mission to foster critical choreographic thinking and long-term artistic development, the masterclass adopts a playful and open-minded approach, exposing the artist's ongoing dialogue—and at times conflict—with their artistic environment, the society they inhabit, and their own sense of self. Participants are encouraged to reflect, experiment, and situate the body as both a personal and political site of inquiry within contemporary choreography.

Motion Qualia – A Movement Practice

by Satoshi Kudo

This workshop introduces Motion Qualia, a movement theory and physical practice developed by choreographer and dancer Satoshi Kudo. Drawing on Kudo's extensive experience working with artists such as Sidi Larbi Cherkaoui, Ohad Naharin, and the Royal Swedish Ballet, the practice explores how movement emerges when the body's natural physics are allowed to lead.

Rather than striving for control, symmetry, or idealized form, Motion Qualia invites dancers to intentionally unbalance the body and engage with gravity, momentum, and weight transfer. By releasing habitual muscular control, participants discover movement that is organic, responsive, and continuously transforming.

The term qualia refers to subjective, felt experience. In Motion Qualia, this concept is applied physically: dancers attune to internal sensations such as pressure, falling, resistance, acceleration, and recovery. These sensations become the primary source of movement, allowing choreography to arise from perception rather than from predetermined shapes or counts.

Through guided improvisation, structured exercises, and partner work, participants will:

Explore instability as a creative tool

Develop heightened bodily awareness and sensory listening

Discover new pathways of movement initiated by gravity and momentum

Expand their expressive range beyond stylistic or technical conventions

Motion Qualia contrasts strongly with codified techniques such as classical ballet, where control and verticality dominate. Instead, it emphasizes adaptation, efficiency, and authenticity of motion, making it applicable to dancers from diverse backgrounds as well as actors, performers, and movement researchers.

The workshop is open to professional dancers, students, and experienced movers interested in deepening their physical intelligence and expanding their relationship to movement creation.

Both Japanese Master classes are generously supported by the Japan Foundation, Bangkok, and TCEB
